REPEATING ITSELF.
How History Follows Around in the Old Circle.
History is repeating itself in the most remarkable manner. When the people were making an effort to free themselves of the United States bank—an institution which was using all its great influence against their interests and in behalf of the money power, of which it was the chief representative—the campaign was almost a duplicate of that on which we are now entering.
Then, as now, the money power was active and enthusiastic. Then, as now, the banking interests worked upon the fears of the more timid business men and so alarmed them that they held meetings and poured thousands upon thousands of petitions into the halls of congress. The commercial bodies, the boards of trade and the chambers of commerce passed strong resolutions indorsing the bank and demanding that it be let alone.
But even this was not all. A powerful lobby made the national capital its headquarters and brought all its influence to bear on the people's representatives. Delegations of "financiers" and prominent business men swarmed around the White House, and such was their persistence that Andrew Jackson was compelled to drive them out of his presence.
We all know the result. The people had their way. Congress refused to renew the charter of the bank and it and its branches went out of business. The people, led by Andrew Jackson, were victorious. The wings of the money power were clipped, and for more than a generation, it was powerless for evil except in a small way.
We have now a repetition of that campaign. The money power, without reason or excuse, has taken up the cause of the Shylock, and it is moving heaven and earth to make an impression on public opinion. It is working on the fears of business men. It is trying to create alarm in the minds of those who are conservative in all things. It is organizing a campaign; it is striving to make these conventions respectable by prevailing on reputable business men to act as delegates.
History is repeating itself in every particular except one—the people have no Andrew Jackson to lead them.—Atlanta Constitution.

PAINFULLY BURNED.

An Accident Liable to Happen to All People.
"Accidentally burned," is a familiar heading in the newspapers of this country, for it applies to all cases in which a person is burned or scalded. Even the savages in revolutionary times met with accidents of this kind, as shown in the illustration. Today such accidents are happening in every house in the land, and thousands of people are suffering through ignorance of the manner of treating such injuries, on which subject a few words would not be out of place.
No well regulated household should be without a medicine chest, and in the chest should be constantly kept a supply of bandages, absorbent cotton and a bottle of that latest and greatest discovery in the medicinal world, Quatrol, manufactured by the Quatrol Remedy company, of Norfolk, Va., and sold by all druggists at 50 cents a bottle. This preparation is quicker in curing burns than anything yet discovered. When an accident of this kind occurs Quatrol should be applied at once, and all pain will be instantly removed and all sores will speedily heal.

Not only will Quatrol quickly cure burns, but it will give instant relief to those suffering from sores, cuts or wounds of any kind, or any skin disease.
Chief M. J. Ryan, of the Norfolk (Va.) fire department, is a strong advocate of Quatrol. He has used it himself, and seen it used in a number of emergency cases by the men of his department on burns, bruises and wounds with entirely satisfactory results. He recommends it to all firemen.
Mr. Paul Vaughn, of Raleigh, N. C., says: "My wife very badly burned thumb of her fingers. One application cured her of the burn. I shall always keep it in my house, for there is nothing equal to it."
Mr. J. E. Booker, editor of the Suffolk Herald, Suffolk, Va., says: "I have found Quatrol a valuable remedy in my household. My wife has used it for a severe scald with entirely satisfactory results. We have also used it in various other instances and consider it a valuable remedy."
